

Synopsis:

There is a clear sky across a large section of the center of the country today thanks to a strong area of high pressure slowly drifting eastward. There is another storm system developing off to the west, sliding across the Plains tomorrow, and bringing a few scattered showers by late tomorrow night into early Thursday. A warm erairmass awaits behind this system which lifts a warm front through - but it's not wide, and scattered showers on the back side of the warm air arrive by Friday evening - becoming more widespread and heavy at times through Saturday before clearing out later Sunday; seasonable conditions prevail into next week

Adverse Weather Outlook

Heavy rain and strong storms possible Saturday
